Do you want to stop worrying, being stressed, and overwhelmed in your daily life? Meditation is the key. Your customers will be amazed by this wonderful BOOK! Definitions of meditation vary, but the best one I have seen is A ritual that allows us to get a proper perspective on our lives. Even though it has that effect, meditation is not about becoming a better person per se. When you meditate, you should not be trying to eliminate harmful emotions or evil thoughts. The key is learning how to observe them objectively to get a better understanding and trying to control them. Meditation is the best and most effective way of attaining wellness in your life. When you meditate, you achieve mindfulness, grounding your mind in the present, and eliminating stress. At the same time, your body finds peace during the time of meditation. Meditating allows us to reconnect with the universe and activate the superconscious mind. The peace that you find from meditating is caused by the fact that by so doing, you create the perfect conduit to achieve complete wellness in mind, body, and spirit. The Tempo of Discipleship Feb 10 2021 We should not only theologize about music, we should shape our theology through music. Music is the truest parable and metaphor that we have that relates to real life experience. It is colorful and complete in its movement, and it encapsulates the full emotional swell of the human experience. Music can help us to embrace and pastor people more effectively where they are, as we seek to bring them along into all that Christ has for them. Melody, harmony, pitch, sustain, resolve, sound, and silence, etc., imitate the shape of our journey toward home. This book looks at how music can help us develop more holistic followers of Christ as we ourselves mature and sojourn together.

The Zuo Tradition / Zuozhuan Reader Dec 11 2020 Zuo Tradition, China's first great work of history, was completed by about 300 BCE and recounts events during a period of disunity from 722 to 468 BCE. The text, which plays a foundational role in Chinese culture, has been newly translated into English by Stephen Durrant, Wai-ye Li, and David Schaberg in an unabridged, bilingual, three-volume set. This reader arranges key passages from that set according to topic, as a guide to the study of early Chinese culture and thought. Chapter subjects include succession struggles; women; warfare; ritual propriety; governance; law and punishment; famous statesmen; diplomacy; Confucius and his disciples; dreams and anomalies; and cultural others. An introduction explains the nature and significance of Zuozhuan and discusses how to read the text. Section introductions and judicious footnoting provide contextual information and explain the historical significance and meaning of particular events. The Zuo Tradition / Zuozhuan Reader will appeal to readers interested in Chinese and world history, claiming a place on library and personal bookshelves alongside other narratives from the ancient world.

Tom and Maggie Tulliver Apr 14 2021 A Change. "Yes, she must go to school!" repeated Mr Chester. A plaintive sob greeted his words from the neighbourhood of the sofa. For once in her life Mrs Chester's kindly, good-tempered face had lost its smiles, and was puckered up into lines of distress. She let one fat, be-ringed hand drop to her side and wander restlessly over the satin skirt in search of a pocket. Presently out came a handkerchief, which was applied to each eye in turn, and came away bedewed with tears. "It will break my heart to part from her!" she faltered. Her husband laughed with masculine scepticism. "Oh, nonsense, dear," he said; "hearts are not so easily broken. You are too sensible to grieve over what is for the child's good, and will get used to the separation, as other mothers have done before you. It will be the making of Rhoda to leave home for a few years, to mix with other girls, and find her level. She is getting an altogether exaggerated idea of her own importance!" "Her level, indeed! Find her level! I should like to know the school where you could find another girl like her!" cried the mother, in a tone which showed plainly enough who was responsible for Miss Rhoda's conceit. The tears dried on her face for very indignation, and she sat upright in her seat, staring across the room. It was a gorgeous apartment, this drawing-room of Erley Chase, the residence of Henry Chester, Esquire, and Marianne his wife; a gorgeous room in the literal acceptance of the term, for each separate article of furniture looked as if it had been chosen more from the fact of its intrinsic value than for its usefulness or beauty. Mr Chester, the son of a country clergyman, had considered himself passing rich when a manufacturer uncle took him into his employ, at a salary of 400 a year. The first thing he did after this position was assured was to marry his old love, the daughter of the village doctor, with whom he had played since childhood; and the young couple spent the first dozen years of their married lives very happily and contentedly in a little house in a smoky manufacturing town. The bachelor uncle was proud of his clever nephew and fond of the cheery little wife, who was always kind and thoughtful even when gout and a naturally irritable temper goaded him into conduct the reverse of amiable. When Harold was born, and christened after himself, he presented the child with a silver mug, and remarked that he hoped he would turn out better than most young men, and not break his parents' hearts as a return for their goodness. When Jim followed, the mug was not forthcoming; but when little Rhoda made her appearance six years later he gave her a rattle, and trusted that she would improve in looks as she grew older, since he never remembered seeing an uglier baby. He was certainly neither a gracious nor a liberal old gentleman, but the young couple were blessed with contented minds and moderate ambitions, so they laughed good-naturedly at his crusty speeches, and considered themselves rich, inasmuch as they were able to pay their way and were spared anxiety for the future....
